

Alan Tiemann

Alan Tiemann has been serving as the at-large director for the Nebraska Corn Board since 2005 and is also the current chairman of the board. He has been farming around Seward since 1978, which has included production of livestock, wheat, soybeans, grain sorghum, and corn. His farming efforts are currently focused on corn and corn-soybean rotations. One of the biggest challenges that Alan has seen while serving on the Nebraska Corn Board is resources.

Alan's other leadership roles have been numerous with the U.S. Grains Council and he currently on the Council's Board of Directors. Alan has formerly served on the Seward Farmers Cooperative Board of Directors, Ruby Farmers Cooperative Board of Directors, and Chairman of the Nebraska Grain Sorghum Board. In 2001, Alan and his family were awarded the Outstanding Farm Family from the Seward Kiwanis.

Alan's family includes his wife, Lori, and two sons; Brian, who is employed by an architecture firm in Chicago, and Dan and his wife, Casey, who farms with Alan on the family farm.
